Mother has a great zest for life and an extreme devotion to her family. For all her other interests and desires she never neglects what she rightly believes to be her foremost duty: that of managing a home, directing and guiding, forgiving and understanding. Her's is a job which she understands to be important and necessary, a knowledge of which too few are aware. Her's is not a glamorous, a singular role, but one which many play and few succeed.

My Mother does not neglect herself, but constantly keeps her personal appearance attractive. it is not uncommon for her age to be underestimated ten to twelve years. Her manner is friendly, kind, understanding, which easily wins her friends, especially from the male audience. My Mother is immensely proud, her head bows to no one; but her admiration for talented and well organized individuals is not subdued.

My Mother seems like an incredible and unusual specimen of womanhood, an opinion which is well founded, can easily be defended, and shall always be defended by her family.
